

PARISH OF DUNFERMLINE.

THIS PARISH containing the City and Royal Burgh of Dunfermline, is situated in the south west of the County, and is bounded on the north by Cleish in Kinrossshire, on the west by Saline, Carnock, and Torryburn, on the east by Beath, Inverkeithing, Aberdour, and Dalgety, and on the south by Inverkeithing, and the Firth of Forth. The Parish is about nine miles in extreme length from north to south, and six miles in extreme breadth, and is the largest parish in the County. The land swells gently upwards from the coast to the hills of Cleish, the highest points in the Parish being Craigluscar Hill on the north western border, and the Hill of Beath on the boundary with the parish of that name. A very commanding prospect is obtained from the top of this last mentioned hill, which is clothed with verdure to the very summit. The southern part of the Parish is in a high state of cultivation, and well enclosed ; and there are also a number of fine mansion houses, which, with the beautiful woods by which they are surrounded render the scenery very imposing and picturesque. The soil towards the north is inferior to that of the south, and although much has been done for its improvement of late, it still wears a more barren and sterile aspect.

The only stream in the Parish worth noticing is the Lyne or Spittal, which takes its rise in the neighbourhood of Crossgates, and flows throughout the entire length of the parish to that of Torryburn where it bends to the south and forms the boundary between the two parishes, and ultimately falls into the Firth of Forth. The Parish also contains several lakes, the principal of which are, the Town Loch, Lochfitty Lochgloe, and the Black Loch. The chief mansion houses are, Pittencrieff, Pitferrane, Pitreavie, and Broomhall, the seat of Lord Elgin, who claims to be a descendant of the illustrious house of Bruce, although the efforts to trace the connection up to the royal Robert have not proved successful.

There are extensive coal fields in this Parish, which have been wrought for the long period of 600 years, and still form a fruitful source of industry and wealth in the rural districts. Dunfermline was the third place in Britain where coal was obtained, and although an immense quantity of this useful mineral is yearly dug, and sent off both by land and sea, the fields seem still as inexhaustible as ever. The most extensive collieries are, the Elgin Colliery, Wellwood, Townhill, Appin, Halbeath, Cuttlehill, and South Lethans. Limestone is also wrought in several places, but the principal work is at Charleston, on the lands of Broomhall. Ironstone abounds to some extent, and there are various whinstone and freestone quarries. There were at one time seven mills for the spinning of linen yarns in the Parish, only one of which is in existence at the present time There are, however, several bleachfields, power loom and hand loom factories, brick works, iron foundries, breweries, dye works, a soap work, two tobacco manufactories, corn and flour mills, and other public works of a similar description. The principal villages are, Charleston, Limekilns, Crossford, Patie Muir, Halbeath, Masterton, part of Crossgates, and North Queensferry. That portion, however, in which the latter is situated is a modern annexation, formerly belonging to Inverkeithing parish, and is upwards of two miles distant from the nearest point of the main body of the Parish.

The city and town of Dunfermline is situated a little to the south of the centre of the Parish, sixteen miles north west of Edinburgh, and thirty south west of Cupar. Part of the town stands at an elevation of 270 feet above the level of the sea, and slopes in a rather steep descent toward the south. Dunfermline was constituted a Royal Burgh by a charter from James VI., dated 24th

May, 1558, and is governed by a provost, two bailies, a guild magistrate, a treasurer, seventeen councillors, and a town clerk. It unites with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, and South Queensferry, in returning a member to Parliament. At a very early period the town became the residence of royalty. Malcolm Canmore usually resided in a tower or castle which he erected in what is now called Pittencrieff Glen, a little to the south west of the town. A palace was afterwards erected in a most romantic situation near the tower, the south west wall of which still remains, affording a specimen of the architectural grandeur of the building of which it formed part. Malcolm, while residing here, married Margaret, a Saxon princess who, with a brother who was heir to the English throne, fled to Scotland from the Norman conqueror, or, as some maintain, they intended to proceed to Hungary, but the vessel in which they sailed was driven into the small bay about a mile north west of North Queensferry, and hence the origin of the name of the bay, St Margaret's Hope, as also that of Queensferry, both North and South. About two miles from Dunfermline, on the roadside near Pitreavie, is a large stone on which Margaret is said to have rested, and now called St Margaret's Stone. After Malcolm's marriage he, at her request, founded and endowed a Monastery in the immediate vicinity of their own residence, which David I. raised to the dignity of an Abbey. It was richly endowed, and derived part of its revenue from various and distant parts of the kingdom, but it fell a prey to the plundering army of Edward I, and the whole building was demolished at the Reformation in 1560. Margaret did much for the introduction of civilization, and the diffusion of knowledge among the Scots, who were at that time regarded as a race of barbarians. Malcolm, his Queen, and some of their family were buried in the Abbey church; and at a later period King Robert Bruce, with his Queen and daughter, were interred in the same place.

The small portions of the Abbey which still remain are sufficient to give an indication of its original grandeur and magnificence. The nave of the Church is in a pretty fair state of preservation, and affords a very good idea of the style of architecture at the period of its erection, and forms one of the most interesting objects of antiquity in Dunfermline. This part of the building was kept in repair from the Reformation down to 1821, in consequence of its being used as a place of worship.

The Parish Church is a handsome edifice, with a square tower 100 feet high at the east end. When digging the foundation for this building in 1818, the tomb of Robert Bruce was discovered 490 years after his death. His remains now lie in a stone coffin immediately below the pulpit of the Church. The charge since 1645 has been collegiate, In addition to the Parish Church, there is, St Andrews Quoad Sacra Church, and a Chapel of Ease at Golfdrum. There are also in the Parish three Free Churches, six U. P. Churches, a Catholic Apostolic Church, and Chapels connected with the Episcopal, Independent, Baptist, and Roman Catholic bodies. The celebrated Ralph Erskine, one of the founders of the Secession Church, was minister of this Parish previous to his seceding from the Establishment.

There is no Parochial School in the Parish, but the educational wants of the population are well supplied. The Burgh or High School is under the management of the magistrates and town council. The Commercial Academy is under the control of the Guildry. The Rolland or Priority Lane School, which originated in a donation by the late Adam Rolland, Esq., of Gask, is under the direction of the town council, and supplies the ordinary branches of education, at a low rate, thus proving a great boon to the poorer classes in the town. There is also a suite of Free Church Schools, a School for poor girls, an Episcopal School, and five seminaries for young ladies. All the collieries in the Parish have also Schools in connection with them.

The inhabitants in the town are principally engaged in hand loom weaving and the fabrics woven are chiefly table linens and damask cloth. In this latter department, Dunfermline has long occupied the foremost place and, for richness of design and beauty of finish, its manufactures have scarcely ever been equalled, much less surpassed. This branch however has of late greatly declined, and the wages of the operatives have become very unremunerative, beside being subjected to periodical stagnations, which are driving many to follow after other and more profitable occupations. A good number are also employed at the power loom factories and other public works. A few of those residing in the landward part of the Parish are engaged in agricultural labours, but the great majority of them are employed as miners at the collieries, with which the Parish abounds. A considerable number of the inhabitants of Charleston and Limekilns are connected with seafaring avocations.

There is a resident Sheriff Substitute for the western district of the County in Dunfermline. The County Buildings are constructed in the Grecian style, and are surmounted by a Spire 132 feet high. They contain a Sheriff court room, Justice of Peace court room, and other rooms for the convenience of court officers. The buildings also include a post office, a savings bank, a public library, and reading rooms. The Music Hall is a fine modern structure of two flats erected by Wm. Clark, Jun. The upper hall is used for all kinds of public meetings, and the lower occasionally as a theatre, and on Tuesday (the corn market day) as a corn exchange. It has recently undergone extensive alterations, and no expense has been spared to adorn and ornament it.

The Parish is well supplied with good roads, and there are terminal stations at Dunfermline for the branch line of the E. P. & D. Railway, the Stirling & Dunfermline, and Charleston Railways. Application was made to Parliament in the spring of 1861, for a Bill to sanction the construction of a Railway from Dunfermline to Edinburgh, by way of North Queensferry, but the Bill was lost.

A weekly market is held on Tuesday, chiefly for grain, which is disposed of both by stock and sample. Fairs for the sale of cattle and horses are held on the third Tuesday of each month.

There are four Newspapers published in the town, viz. : The Dunfermline Advertiser, published on the second Friday of every month, the Dunfermline journal, published on the fourth Friday of every month, the Dunfermline Press, published every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and the Telegraph and News, every Saturday.

The POST TOWN is Dunfermline, Robert Steedman- Post Master The town deliveries commence about 7 and 10.45 A.M., and 6.30 P.M. The mails are despatched at 6 and 9 A.M., and 3.35 P.M The following are the Sub Post offices and Sub Post Masters, viz. : Charleston, George Blyth; Limekilns, Richard Barber; Halbeath, Robert Gourlay; Townhill, David Wilson Walking postmen leave the Post Office about 10. 45 A. m., for the Sub Offices, and return in time for the afternoon's despatch at 3.35 P. m.
