PARISHES OF ST ANDREWS & ST LEONARDS.

The PARISH OF ST ANDREWS 'containing the city of its own name, and the villages of Strathkinness, Kincaple, Grange, Boarhills, and part of Denhead, is on the east coast of the County. It is bounded by the Bay of St Andrews, the Estuary of the Eden, and the parish of Leuchars, on the north, by the Bay of St Andrews, and by the parishes of Kingsbarns and St Leonards on the east, by Denino, Cameron, and Ceres, on the south, and by Ceres and Kemback on the west. Its greatest length from north west to south east is about ten miles and its extreme breadth, from the coble shore to Denhead, is three and three fourths miles, but its average breadth is not above two and a half miles. Its area is reckoned at 17 square miles, or about 11,000 acres. The ascent of the surface is from the north to the south and east. Along the Estuary of the Eden, on the northern border, the land is low, flat, and sandy; only a part of this is in tillage, the greater portion forming downs or links, which afford pasturage for sheep, and are also useful as a place of recreation for the inhabitants of the city. From the mouth of the Eden to Kenly Burn, which divides the Parish from Kingsbarns, there are about six miles of sea coast; two miles of which, to the north and east of the town, consist of low sand hills, which form the eastern boundary of the links. The rest of the coast is bold and rocky, the sandstone cropping out in some places into perpendicular precipices of from 50 to 60 feet in height. In this line of coast, to the east of the city, are several isolated rocks, such as the Maiden Rock, an isolated mass of sandstone, forty feet high; the Rock and the Spindle, an outburst of the trap, thirty feet high; and the Buddo Rock, near Boarhills. Inland, the surface of the Parish is finely diversified, rising at the Balrymonts on the south to hills of 350 feet and at Clatto on the west to 550 feet; and again receding into open valleys. In general it is highly cultivated, and in many places ornamented with wood surrounding the different gentlemens' seats, or planted on land which would otherwise be waste.

The highways are such as diverge from St Andrews as a centre, viz.: south east to Crail, south, by King's Muir, to Anstruther, south west to Elie and Largo, west, by Guardbridge, to Cupar, and west, by Pitscottie, to Ceres. There are also statute labour roads leading from off the turnpike roads, to the villages of Denhead, Strath.kinness, and Grange. The St Andrews Railway intersects the Parish westwards, from the Links to Guardbridge, and joins the E. P. & D. Railway at Milton, There are no lakes or brooks of any consequence in the interior of the Parish.

The south west wind is the most prevalent, but, in common with all the eastern part of the island, the Parish is subjected to the cold, damp, easterly winds, or haars, which prevail in April and May. St Andrews Bay is proverbially dangerous to navigators, and vessels driven into it by an easterly wind, being unable to weather the opposite points of Fife Ness and the Redhead, are compelled to run for shelter into the mouth of the Tay, which none but those thoroughly acquainted with the intricate navigation at the entrance to that river, can attempt without a pilot; and, consequently, numerous melancholy shipwrecks take place.

The city of St Andrews stands on a rocky ridge in the central part of the coast of the Parish ten miles east of Cupar, eleven south south east of Newport, and ten north of Anstruther. The ridge is about three fourths of a mile long, by half a mile broad, and is washed by the sea on the north and east, where it terminates in abrupt precipices, giving the city an appearance of elevation and grandeur. Its surface seems to the eye as flat, but it really declines gently on all sides from a point near the centre of the town. The view of the city, with its environs and backgrounds, from a distance of two miles to the south east, south, or south west is magnificent. On the left, the eye ranges over the vast sweep of the Bay of St Andrews and the coast of Angus; on the right, rises the richly wooded bank of Strathtyrum, while the venerable majestic towers and spires of the churches shooting into the air over the horizon line, combine to form a finely varied and imposing scene. The city contains three principal streets, viz.: South Street, Market Street, in the centre of which stands the old Town Hall, and North Street. All these run westwards from the Cathedral, and are intersected at right angles by secondary streets and lanes. The principal streets are broad, spacious, and well paved.

The ancient history of St Andrews is involved in obscurity, and mingled with monkish fable, but although the story of its origin in the advent of eighteen Greek monks and three nuns, who were wrecked in St Andrews Bay, at a period not later than the 7th century, meets with little credit, still its origin dates from an early period. Its authentic history, though not continuous, may be said to commence in the 9th century, when, in 840, the King of the Scots annihilated the power of the Pictish nation, and created St Andrews the civil and ecclesiastical metropolis of the kingdom. At this era the name of the city was changed from Kilrymont to St Andrews, and St Andrew was constituted the patron saint of the kingdom.

In such a work as the present we can merely notice a few of the principal events in the history of the city. In 1112, Turgot, the 16th Bishop, founded Trinity Church, upon the site of the present Parish Church, and dedicated it to the Holy Trinity, and it was known by the name of Trinity Church. Twenty years later the Priory was founded by Bishop Robert, which establishment was ultimately reckoned second to none in the kingdom for the magnificence of its buildings and the amount of its revenues. Arnold, the 19th Bishop, who was elected in 1159, founded the Cathedral Church, which building was not completed until 160 years after in 1200, the Castle was founded by Rodger, the 22nd Bishop, as a residence for himself and his prelatical successors. In 1274, Wishart, the 28th Bishop founded the Blackfriars Monastery, of which the fine ruin in front of the Madras College is the only memorial. In 1411, the foundation of the University, the first in Scotland was laid by Wardlaw, the 36th Bishop. The same prelate built the Guardbridge, and it was during his Episcopate that John Resby and Paul Craw were burned at the stake, the former at Perth, and the latter at St Andrews, for holding opinions derogatory to the Papacy. In 1455, Bishop Kennedy, the last Bishop, founded St Salvator's College and Chapel, and richly endowed it. Subsequent to 1512 Prior John Hepburn founded St Leonard's College, and afterwards surrounded it with a wall, nearly all of which is still standing. James Beaton, Uncle of Cardinal Beaten, was the 6th Archbishop of St Andrews. At his own expense he erected a large portion of the buildings of St Mary's College. His memory is, however, sullied by the burning of Patrick Hamilton and Henry Forrest. Cardinal Beaton succeeded his uncle as Archbishop in 1539, and was the prime agent in bringing George Wishart to the stake; a deed of blood which was terribly avenged by his own murder, shortly after, in his own castle, by Norman Leslie and other friends of Wishart. The last Roman Catholic Archbishop was John Hamilton, upon whose memory rests the odium of being the last prelate who put any one to death under the sway of Roman Catholics in Scotland. Poor old Walter Mill was 80 years of age when brought to the stake, and his death hastened on the crisis of the Reformation, which had previously been making rapid strides. The eloquence of Knox roused the heart of the nation to its inmost depths, and in a few days the old ecclesiastical system and its patrons were in the dust; and nearly the whole fraternity of bishops, priests, abbots, monks, friars, and nuns, either fled or joined the Protestant party.

With the Reformation, the importance of St Andrews, as the central power, or focus, from whence radiated the leading national events, terminated; and, although its University and Colleges were spared, the city sunk in importance, until its grass grown streets became a proverb. This state of matters is now, however, changed, and, Phoenix like, it is springing afresh from its own ashes into if not in all its ancient power and pageantry, at least, in its former splendour. The first measure that arrested the progress of decay was the munificent bequest of Dr. Andrew Bell, by which the splendid Madras College in South Street was erected. The same gentleman made another bequest to the city, the proceeds of which amount to £300 per annum, to be expended upon moral and religions purposes, and permanent improvements connected with the city. This fund has aided in the opening up of new streets, and repaving the old streets and lanes; in building new schools, and a new town hall; in bringing in a better supply of water into the city; in the organization of a mechanics' reading room and library, &,c., &c. During the period these changes were in progress, repeated grants were obtained from the Legislature for the rebuilding and improvement of the Colleges; making St Andrews, so far as educational privileges are concerned, second to no town in the kingdom. These improvements were nearly all carried out and conducted by the late Lieutenant Colonel Sir Hugh Lyon Playfair, LL.D., who, as provost of the city for many years, devoted himself to the renovation of the town so successfully, that it may be said he found it in ruins, and left it a city of palaces.

We can now merely mention a few of the numerous antiquities and objects of interest that arrest the attention of visitors to this ancient city. Landing at the railway station, the stranger is at once set down at the Links, which are not only a fine promenade, but the best golfing ground in the kingdom; and where that fine game is always enthusiastically carried on. At the east end of the Links is the Clubhouse, which was erected in 1853 for the accommodation of the gentlemen connected with the golf club. To the cast of the club house, at the entrance to the "Scores," or "Swallow Gate," is a fine Obelisk, erected in 1844, in memory of the martyrs who were burned at the stake in St Andrews, between the years 1528 and 1558, rather than abjure the Protestant faith. On the left hand, proceeding eastward along the beautiful walk of the "Scores," are the Baths, upon the top of the cliff overhanging the sea, where hot, cold, and shower baths are always to be had. A little farther to the east are the Castle ruins, where the old dungeon and well may v be seen in much the same state as they were 400 years ago. It was in front of the Castle that Wishart was burned; and it was over one of the front windows that the body of Cardinal Beaton was hung on the day of his murder. Still further to the eastward, and overlooking the harbour, is the flag staff of the coast guard, which is erected upon the Kirkhill; where, in very early times, flourished a College of the Culdees. Some excavations, made in 1860, laid bare portions of the foundations of the ancient buildings; and at same time many interesting memorials of a far byegone age, were discovered. At the foot of the hill is the Harbour, consisting of an outer and an inner basin. It is not large, but safe when reached. The exports are chiefly iron stone char, potatoes, and grain; and the imports,, timber, pavement, coal, and small goods. The annual amount of shore dues is about £250. The Abbey wall, which next claims attention, begins at the cast gable wall of the Cathedral ruins, and sweeps round the harbour as far as the East Toll, where it turns to the westward, and ends at St Leonards. The whole length is upwards of half a mile, by twenty feet in height, and four in thickness, inclosing an area of about twenty acres. This extensive work was begun in 1516 by Sub Prior John Hepburn, for the purpose of confining the Archbishop within his own Cathedral domains, a serious difference having arisen between the two dignitaries. The Cathedral ruins and St Regulus' Tower are within the walls of the burying ground. The east gable of the Cathedral with its two Spires, 100 feet in height, as also one Spire and a large portion of the west gable, are still entire. The only other remaining portions are the south wall of the nave, and the west wall of the south transept. St Regulus' Tower and Chapel, or the "four nooked Steeple," is to the cast of the Cathedral ruins. Tradition asserts that it was built in the 5th century by the King of the Picts, on his conversion to Christianity by the Greek monk, St Regulus; Mr Robert Chambers thinks it belongs to the 8th or 9th century, and Mr Joseph Robertson, writing in 1849, asserts that it must have been built in the 12th century. Its height is 108 feet, and a circular staircase consisting of 156 steps conducts to the top, from whence a splendid panoramic view of the city is obtained. Proceeding west the South Street, the first opening to the south loads to the rootless ruins of St Leonard's Chapel, which when entire must have been a splendid specimen of Gothic architecture. On the wall and floor are a number of interesting old monuments. Nearly midway between the burial ground and the West Port is St Mary's College, the most interesting object belonging to which is the University Library, amounting to 60,000 volumes. To the west of St Mary's College, on the north side of the street, is the Parish Church, erected in 1800, on the site of the old Trinity Church built by Bishop Turgot. It is very plain, and, though large, is not a commodious building. The chief object of interest connected with it is the monument erected to the memory of Archbishop Sharp, by his son. It is an elegant structure of black and white marble, and is situated in the east end of the aisle. On the opposite side of the street is the fine new Town Hall, completed and opened for public use in 1861. It is well adapted for public meetings, or for a concert and lecture room. A little to the westward of the Town Hall are the Madras College, and ruins of the Blackfriars Chapel, which have been already noticed. The only other object of interest in the South Street is the fine old gateway at "the Port," the origin of which is unknown. There is not much to attract attention in the Market Street, if we except the Infant School and the old Town Hall and Tolbooth. In the North Street, and near its middle, are the buildings connected with the United College of St Salvator and St Leonard, the College Church, Bishop Kennedy's Tomb, and the Museum. The latter contains a miscellaneous mass of curiosities, in addition to a fine collection of British and foreign beasts, birds, reptiles, fishes, &c.; and there is nothing within the precincts of the city more likely to create an interest in the breast of a stranger, than the various buildings and objects connected with the United College.

It is, believed that the town of St Andrews owes its origin to the College of the Culdees that flourished here at a very early date, and latterly to the residence of a Bishop. After the introduction of Saxon customs among the Celtic people of Scotland, it, in all probability became a Burgh holding of the Bishop. Its earliest Royal Charter is by Malcolm IV., grandson of David I, which is still preserved among the records of the Burgh. This curious document is written upon a piece of parchment only three inches long, by one and a half broad. It is without date, but as Malcolm succeeded his grandfather in 1153, and died in 1165, the document is at least 694 years old. The Burgh is governed by twenty nine councillors, including a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, and a dean of guild; and joins with Cupar and the five East of Fife Burghs in returning a Member to Parliament. A weekly market for the sale of corn, by sample, is held on Monday, and a market for the sale of butter, eggs, and other farm produce, on Wednesday and Saturday. There is a hiring fair for agricultural servants on the second Tuesday of August, known as the Lammas fair, which is well attended. A lintseed market in April, and a winter market in November, have dwindled into insignificance.

St Andrews derives its modern importance mainly from the number and prosperity of its educational establishments, joined to the healthiness of its situation, and the facilities it affords for sea bathing purposes; and, on this account, the number of its gentry far exceeds that of other towns of a similar size. It is a practise with many of our country gentlemen, instead of boarding their children in a university town, to make the city their residence during the period that their children are receiving their education the junior branches at the Madras College, and the senior at the University; and, as there are also several hundreds of young gentlemen boarded in the city, the result is such a circulation of capital as compensates for the want of trade and manufactures, public works, &c.

There are five places of worship in the city and Parish, connected with the Establishment, viz.: the Parish Church, St Marys Church, the College Church (St Leonards Parish Church), a Quoad Sacra Parish Church at Strathkinness, and a Preaching Station at Boarhills. The Parish of St Andrews is a collegiate charge, and the two ministers officiate alternately in the Town Church and St Marys Church. There are two Free Churches, one in the city and one at Strathkinness. There are also in the town a U. P. Church, an Episcopalian Church, an Independent Church, and a Baptist Church.

Several of the educational establishments have been already incidentally noticed the chief of which is the United College of St Salvators and St Leonards. This establishment embraces a principal and nine professors, besides the usual working machinery. The number of students is generally about 80. St Marys College, in South Street, is entirely devoted to the study of divinity. The staff consists of four professors, one of whom is principal. The number of students is generally from 20 to 30. The Madras College is by far the most important educational institution in the County, so far as the number of pupils is concerned. The branches taught are, English, the classics, modern languages, mathematics, writing, drawing, music, &c. There are in all, eight class rooms and eight head masters of departments, besides assistants and pupil teachers. The pupils generally number about 1000. The Institution also includes a Female Industrial Department for girls. The Fishers' District School is at the east end of the town. The day pupils number about 160, and there is a sewing class for girls in the evening at which the attendance is about 80. There is also an Infant School in Market Street, at which there is an attendance of about 120. Besides these public institutions there are others of a more private nature, the most celebrated of which is that of David J. Smeaton, Esq., Abbey Park; at which not less than 80 young gentlemen, from all parts, are boarded and educated. Besides the personal superintendence of Mr Smeaton, there are five resident tutors within the establishment, and five separate masters. Mr Thomas Hodge, West View, presides over an institution chiefly intended for the education and training of youths who have the army in view as a profession, which is only second to that of Mr Smeaton, both as regards the number of pupils, and the high estimation in which it is held by the public. Institutions of a similar nature are conducted by Mr Paterson, Clifton Bank, and by the Messrs Cleghorn. There are also boarding establishments for the education of young ladies, several talented teachers of music, and two establishments for the sale and hire of pianofortes, &c., &c.

The village of Strathkinness is near the western border. It is a straggling place, with several freestone quarries in the neighbourhood, where a number of the villagers find employment. A number are also employed at the Winthank ironstone mines, and a number are weavers and village tradesmen. Kincaple is a smaller village, about a mile to the north of Strathkinness. The inhabitants are either agricultural labourers, or find employment at the Seafield brickwork, or at the adjoining malt barns. The Grange is a scattered hamlet to the south of the city, and Boarhills is on the eastern border. It is chiefly made up of three farm steadings, a School House and master's residence, and a few tradesmen's cottages.

ST LEONARDS is a small Parish lying partly embosomed in that of St Andrews, and is identified with it and with the city in most of its interests. It consists of several detached portions in and around the city, and of three farms on the eastern boundary of St Andrews parish surrounded by the parishes of St Andrews, Kingsbarns, Crail, and Denino. Its total extent is about 820 acres. St Leonards being so thoroughly connected, historically and politically, with the city and parish of St Andrews, we have embraced both in one list. The Addresses given belonging to St Leonards number only about 20.

POST OFFICE, 7 Union Street, George Cruickshank, Post Master, with Sub Offices at Strathkinness, Denhead, and Boarhills. Letters from Dundee, Edinburgh, Cupar, &c., arrive about 9.25 A.M. and 6 P.M. Letter Box closes at 2. 10 and 11 P. m. Letters from Crail, Kingsbarns, and Boarhills, arrive at 8 P.M. and are despatched at 9.55 A.M. A walking postman leaves about 10 A.M. for Grange, &c., returning in time for the afternoon's despatch. Another leaves at the same hour for Mount Melville, Denhead, Strathkinness, and Kincaple, and returns in the evening.
